The political move of Port Physician Trousseau in respect to the segregation can continue to support a measure of lepers has brought out some sworn and barbarism of the middle ages." professional testimony of the French doctor which contradicts at every point his present notions about the noncontagiousness of the white plague.

In the case of The King vs. Thomas Thrum, editor of the Saturday Press, for criminal libel in criticising the methods adopted by Dr. George Fitch, a Government physician, in the treatment of leprosy in the case of one Summer, Dr. Trousseau was an important witness. The case was tried at the July term of the Supreme Court, 1883, Messrs. Hatch and Russell appearing for the prosecution and Hon. Sanford B. Dole for the defense, a verfollowing extracts are taken from the original notes taken by Chief Justice Judd on the trial of the case:

Sufficient to say that I am a noncontagionist, and therefore can see no advantages in segregation. I admit, shortly after 4 P.
